Personal preferences

It is useful to consider and document any personal preferences you have in relation to how you are cared for and treated.

This information may be useful so your family can understand what is important to you, and remind the health professionals working with you.

These preferences may include things such as:

- the preference for an interpreter to be available during any appointments
- any religious or cultural preferences
- any dietary preferences
- preference to be treated by a male or a female health professional
- need for any visual or hearing-related support or communication devices
- recognition of any potential risks – such as risk of falls, memory impairment.
